of a Roman date for the deed.

The odor remained on the oyster discovered in Square C. In any case, when the bowl or large sheet consisting the inscription was broken, only the two letters with part of the inscription lay on the bowl or large sheet consisting the inscription. The oyster was found in Square C.

The oyster shell was probably already broken in antiquity.

University of Massachusetts Amherst

Laurence T. Cerney

HESBON OSTRACON X